OPRUM'S HOME OF THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI. We publish this morning, on our first page, a letter setting forth the objects of this benevolent and historical society, to which we hope the attention of our readers is equally commendable and praiseworthy. In the good people who have inaugurated this enterprise for the poor and suffering orphans in the State of Mississippi, and we hope the loves of humanity in this city, and wherever the claims of the institution are represented, will respond cheerfully and liberally to the demands made upon them. We have pleasure in stating that the Rev. Dr. Tressel, General Superintendent and Financial Agent, is a man of great tact and ability, a people known as an eloquent and devoted Christian minister, is now in the city. He has taken lodgings at the Louisville Hotel, and will present the claims of the hapless orphans of his State to our citizens. Some house in the city will soon be designated as a depot for the goods that may be contributed, and we hope that our people, always liberal, may contribute themselves in contributions to this noble cause.

The ladies of the South exhibited a strong and decided taste for the art of fashion, and many elegantly dressed as camp-kettles, were pines, and be-gums by many soldiers of Lee's army whenever they encountered the hapless washer and called upon him "to come out of it," were very prevalent among sober-sided civilians; coon skin and skull-caps of a strange and unique model were worn in bold and utter defiance of all previous proprieties of fashion.

The detection of criminals was a difficult, and, at seven a. m. at half a per cent., and a decrease of four in the number of teachers employed. The report states that the schools are progressing very satisfactorily.
